Why Choose AAADM Certified Inspector to Install Automatic Doors?

Training, expertise, and inspection ability save time and help ensure safety

June 21, 2021—Automatic doors, like any piece of machinery, must be properly installed and maintained to provide reliable, safe operation.

Facility owners and architects who choose automatic doors to improve the look and functionality of their buildings are encouraged to choose installation and service from technicians who are AAADM Certified Inspectors (and the companies that employ them). The American Association of Automatic Door Manufacturers \(AAADM\) provides two certification training programs for installers and service technicians. By choosing an installer who is an AAADM Certified Inspector, door owners can be confident in providing door users with safe, reliable means of access.

In its role as the managing trade association for manufacturers of automatic pedestrian door systems, AAADM has developed standards to guide the proper design, manufacture, and installation of automatic doors. Service technicians and installers are then thoroughly trained on the latest automatic door standards and technology. The program course includes hands-on training and instruction from a select group of automatic door experts. To become certified, inspectors must demonstrate their grasp of the requirements during training and must pass a rigorous exam to verify that their understanding of training materials and standards.

When choosing an installer, it makes sense to use someone who has shown a commitment to the product, who understands the latest standards, and who is capable of performing an inspection (AAADM recommends an inspection of all automatic doors immediately following installation and annually thereafter). AAADM Certified Inspectors and the companies that employ them have demonstrated a commitment to their customers by devoting the time and effort to achieve industry expertise.

About AAADM

The American Association of Automatic Door Manufacturers (AAADM) is a trade association of manufacturers of automatic pedestrian door systems. AAADM was founded in 1994 with the following mission: to increase awareness of automatic doors and accessibility needs; to increase education, training and professionalism among installers and service providers; and to generally promote the safe use of automatic doors. Each year on March 19, AAADM celebrates National Automatic Door Day to raise awareness about the many benefits of automatic doors, including providing access to those with physical challenges and helping to prevent germs by eliminating the need to touch door handles.
